ZIMBABWE’S PRESIDENT FOR LIFE

A withering drought on top of a faltering economy and a financial crisis have not weakened the hold that Zimbabwean President Robert Mugabe and his Zimbabwe African National Union-Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF) have on power in the country. In fact, the 92-year-old Mugabe is already looking ahead to the nation’s 2018 elections. It seems that only his death, or a revolt from within his party, will end his more than three decades in office.

THERESA MAY, THE UK’S SPY QUEEN AND NEW PRIME MINISTER

“Brexit is Brexit,” said Theresa May on Monday, after it was confirmed that she would be the next prime minister of the UK during an incredibly challenging time for the country.

Readers of these pages, however, will be familiar with May’s blunt, no-thrills statements for rather different reasons to those occupying the nation as the aftershock of the EU referendum vote to leave continues to rattle through Whitehall, the City, and high streets across the land.

PERU’S KUCZYNSKI TO BE NEXT PRESIDENT

Pedro Pablo Kuczynski is on track to become Peru’s next president after a near-final vote tally gave him a narrow lead in the country’s tightest election in decades, although his rival Keiko Fujimori has yet to accept defeat.

Outgoing President Ollanta Humala and the leaders of Colombia, Chile and Argentina congratulated Kuczynski, a former investment banker, after the results were announced on Thursday.

The centrist economist said he would wait for a complete count before claiming victory as thousands of disputed or
